

A web-based learning resource providing a comprehensive knowledge base for Sexual Health and HIV

The Sexual Health & HIV project is being developed by the British Association for Sexual Health and HIV in collaboration with the Federation of the Royal Colleges of Physicians and the Department of Health's e-Learning for Healthcare programme, for specialist training in Sexual Health and HIV.

This project will deliver a comprehensive e-learning programme comprising all of the knowledge components of Sexual Health & HIV (GUM) specialist medical training. Many components will also be relevant for trainees overseas and in related specialties such as dermatology, infectious diseases and gynaecology, as well as those in primary care wanting to increase their knowledge in the area of Sexual Health and HIV.

Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons of Glasgow

The training material provides an extensive knowledge base for the whole of STIs and HIV. It will be delivered in 3 levels from introductory, to more advanced and finally specialist knowledge so that learning can be appropriately structured. The training package is designed to provide the knowledge framework, which can then be supplemented by training in the clinical setting to reinforce the knowledge and develop the skills and attitudes necessary for successful practice in the area.

The programme will consist of approximately 200 e-learning sessions, all written by subject matter specialists and experts in their particular field and extensively peer reviewed. Each session will be around 20 minutes in length and will incorporate self-assessment tools, video clips, case studies and an extensive picture library.

It is anticipated that doctors will be able to register for eHIV-STI during the academic year 2009-2010.

For more information visit www.e-lfh.org.uk/HIV-STI